Cedar Brook Farm. Perhaps there is no one living in No vay, or no one who has gone out from the town, of whom the people are more proud than of Don Carlos Seitz. Although not a native, he is largely a product of the town, a graduate of the high school and of the local printing office and newspaper. He won newspaper honors years paper. He won newspaper nonces years ago on the Brooklyn Eagle, going from that paper to the World a quarter of a century ago, proving so efficient he is still there. Not only are the people of Norway proud of Don Seitz but he is proud of them and the town. This is proved by the fact that after he had made good in the world of journalism he bought a piece of the town to come pack to during the summer and res from the wear of office work.

It is a picturesque piece of land, good for crops and tired nerves. To the west the land slopes gently to Lake Pennesseewassee, affording a prospect seldom sur-passed among the lakes of Maine; and o the east it drops off the other side of Prockett's Ridge into the swamp which marks the opposite line of the big farm. Between the lake and the swamp lie nany acres of fine timber, mostly cedar and pine, with some birch; the orchard which includes 150 grafted trees, bearing Baldwins, McIntosh Reds and Graven-Baldwins; the pastures for the dairy; the broad fields where scores f acres of hav are harvested.

Although this farm has long been known as the Bennett Farm, Mr. on his purchase rechristened it as Cedar Brook Farm, probably owing to large number of trees of that variety on the

The privates wore only dark clothes of any old fashion, though the officers were gaily decked in tri-colored cocked hats, dark blue coats faced with scarlet, buff ests, and trousers of light-cream color.
